

The Folcintera Week Challenge

Created by Who-is-Page 3/26/2021

1. What is your species? How do you experience aspects of your nonhumanity?
2. What are some of the biological realities or canonical features of your species which resonate particularly strongly with you? These can be things such as hunting instincts, particular habitats or environments you find yourself drawn to and more comfortable in, species dysphoria around specific parts of the body, and etc.
3. What are some of the mythological, magical, religious, fictional, or cultural themes and species which exist and affect or are a part of your folcinteric nonhumanity? Have you voluntarily embraced certain aspects of these, or did you merely find yourself resonating with them from the beginning?
4. How do you incorporate your nonhumanity into your daily life? Alternatively, or in addition to that, how does your nonhumanity manifest itself in your daily life in notable ways?
5. How and when did you realize the specifics of your species? Was it a long journey, or a short one? Did you know immediately what you were, or was it something that took a while to figure out? Are you still questioning and understanding your species identity?
6. How and when did you realize you were nonhuman? Was it something you had always known on some level? Something that awakened in you, for whatever reason? Something that just ended up becoming a part of you? Do you have any theories or explanations behind your nonhumanity (or species identity), or is it something you prefer not to try and dissect?
7. Some view their nonhumanity as a blessing, while others view it as a curse- where do you fall on this spectrum? What are your opinions about your personal nonhumanity? Are you grateful for it? Would you rather not be nonhuman at all? Why do you feel this way?
